WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Warmer and drier weather can be expected across northwest California as high pressure builds aloft. A significant warming and drying trend is expected Friday into the weekend across the interior while coastal areas should see plenty of sunshine during the late morning and afternoon hours.

Medford Weather:

A flat long wave ridge of high pressure will build over the Pacific Northwest into Saturday night. Northwest flow aloft will become nearly zonal Saturday night. Dry weather with a warming trend can be expected inland.

Reno Weather:

High pressure remains with dry conditions and a warming trend through the weekend. Winds become breezy on Monday ahead of a cold front with cooler temperatures expected next week.

San Francisco Weather:

Warming trend starts today with pleasant weather to finish out the work week. More noted warming starts Saturday morning with light offshore flow and warm temperatures by lunch time. Record high temperatures are possible Saturday, but more likely Sunday as hot weather peaks by Sunday afternoon with offshore flow bringing warm temperatures to the coast. Subtle cooling by Monday but perhaps muggy as moisture from southern California spreads northward. Onshore flow returns Tuesday through most of next week with a return to dry and seasonable weather.

WEATHER

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Dry weather is expected with daytime temperatures rising to well above normal by this weekend. Locally breezy north to east winds through Saturday night. A slow cooling trend will arrive early next week with near normal temperatures again for the second half of next week.

Hanford Weather:

Dry weather can be expected across the central California interior through Monday as high pressure builds in from the Pacific. A day to day warming trend through the period will bring temperatures well above seasonal normals by Saturday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

High pressure and weak offshore flow will bring a warming trend today through Saturday, with well above normal temperatures in most areas over the weekend. Very late in the weekend or early next week, subtropical moisture will push in from the south. This moisture will linger into at least Tuesday night or possibly Wednesday bringing at least a slight chance of showers and possible thunderstorms along with less hot, but humid conditions. Drier weather is expected for the second half of the week.

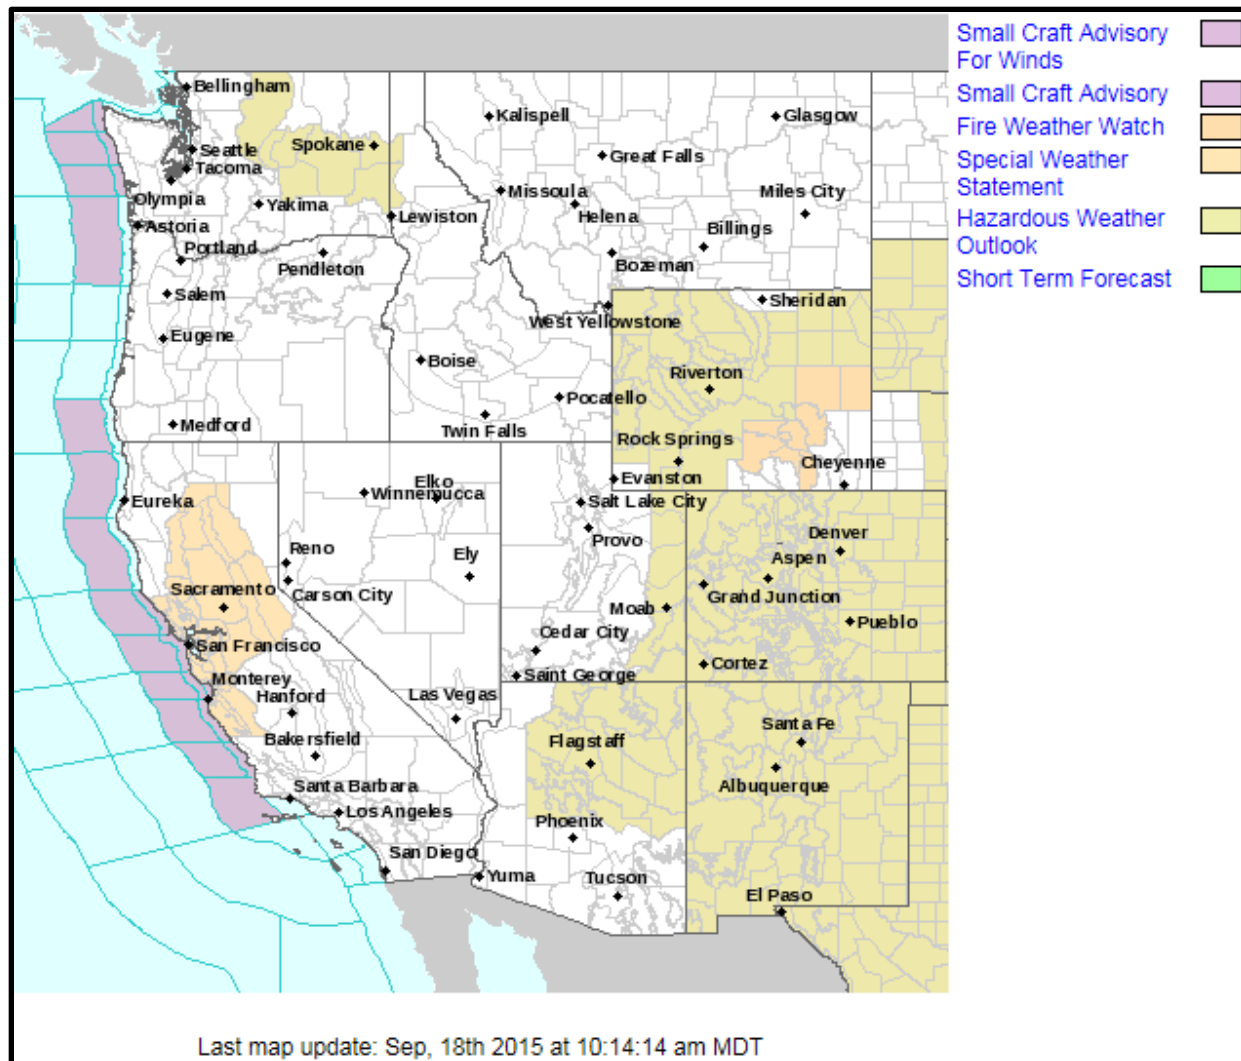

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

Building high pressure aloft will bring mostly sunny skies Friday and Saturday and a gradual warming trend. It will turn increasingly more humid Sunday and Monday as subtropical moisture moves in from the south. Rain is looking more likely Monday and Tuesday as a low pressure trough moves in from the southwest. The trough will move east on Wednesday with dry, seasonal weather Thursday and Friday.

Southeast California Weather:

Dry weather with mostly clear skies will continue through Saturday. However, another Pacific low pressure system is forecast to develop off the northern Baja coast Saturday night. This system will likely circulate an abundant amount of subtropical moisture starting Sunday becoming thicker Monday and Tuesday with a good chance of showers and thunderstorms.
